Dear Ms. Hesse,

I have been following the Microsoft case for many months and I believe that the proposed resolution of the case is clearly not in the interest of the American consumer and not good for the economy.

Microsoft will still be a monopoly for all intents and purposes and will continue to use their power to limit competition. The new regulations have far too many loop holes and with Microsoft's record there is no reason to believe they will change the way they do business.

Microsoft must be held accountable and forced to allow applications that run on their system to be used anywhere. And they must be required to make their products compatible with competitive products.

To make this process fair to all, we need to hear from public consumer groups and from state governments not just Microsoft and their competitors. This is a right given by the Tunney act and must be preserved.

It is my sincere hope that you will consider these points before going forward. The American people deserve and have a right to choose the products that serve them best, the proposed settlement is unfair and unjust. Please allow the people a voice.

Thank you,
Thomas B. Daly, Ph.D.
